

Kyle Spiegel

1. Internationalization is the process of abstracting all elements of a program possible so that information can be pulled in and translated. Localization is creating data so that it can be translated as necessary.
2. It is important because people from different cultures would read things differently and could mean the same thing but type things differently dates are written very differently in different countries for example.